"If you do one good thing every day, you can change 365 people's lives a year. You know, all it takes is one good act of kindness."

Sydney, a resident at Bob's Place

Dear {{FirstName}},

Have you seen The Age newspaper today? It's Valentine's Day, and the Melbourne Zero movement has published its second 'Love Letter to Melbourne'!

Launch Housing is proud to power Melbourne Zero – the community campaign and network on a mission to end homelessness in Melbourne, starting with ending rough sleeping by 2030. We launched one year ago, and we're now a movement of 6,500+ people and 45+ businesses and organisations committed to positive change.

The solutions are known, and with the right housing, healthcare and support, Melbourne will permanently end homelessness.

Like you, we want more for Melbourne - a liveable city and safe place to call home for all of us.

Grab a copy of The Age today!

Benan Warner

BEVAN WARNER
Chief Executive Office

Motivated to take action? Join Melbourne Zero's upcoming Grassroots Action Workshop.

The groundswell of support is clear: Melbourne is serious about ending homelessness.

We're hoping we can meet you at the upcoming Melbourne Zero grassroots action workshop – 6 pm, 28 February in the CBD!

Covering everything from small, day-to-day actions and social meetups to advocating for homelessness policies at local council meetings, this workshop is your starting point for creating change in your local community.

Register here

The Guardian's investigation into homelessness deaths

Last week The Guardian published a series of powerful articles following their yearlong investigation into the deaths of people experiencing homelessness across the country.

Hundreds of Australians are dying on the streets and have a life expectancy significantly lower than the average person. We can't accept this as the norm. We need more housing + healthcare + support to end homelessness.

Read the investigation here.